Foreign Language Teaching Assistant

The Fulbright Foreign Language Teaching Assistants (FLTA) program strengthens foreign language instruction at U.S. education institutions by giving young, international teachers of English a chance to refine their teaching skills, increase their English proficiency and extend their knowledge of the culture and customs of the United States while engaging in non-degree studies. Up to 40 FLTAs are selected from China each year. Candidates must be Chinese citizens, aged 32 or under at the time of application, who are residents in China and come from one of the 1000 Chinese institutions or the selected secondary schools approved by the Ministry of Education of China as eligible to nominate candidates.

FLTAs are placed primarily at universities and colleges in the United States for an academic year to teach their native language and culture for up to 20 hours per week while taking two courses per semester. U.S. universities and colleges want FLTAs with excellent organizational and computer skills and prefer candidates who have interests in sports, outdoor activities, music, dance, theatre, literature, poetry, and/or cooking. Candidates should also demonstrate sharpened teaching skills and a strong sense of creativity and adaptability which will contribute to their success as a Chinese language teacher in a foreign environment. Most of all, they look for candidates who demonstrate flexibility and a willingness to learn.

"This has been one of the best time[s] I have ever had in my life. I took courses I am interested in... taught American students... travelled widely in [the] U.S.A... I even learned how to swim in Southern California! ... Without [the] Fulbright program, all these would be impossible."
